” During the war -
our country's vital nerves crossed the seas”

During the war, our country's vital nerves crossed the seas. The large amount of war material and other supplies needed by our defense and our country was brought to our country without delay...

... The waters were often blocked by mines and our ships were subjected to air attacks in many places. Despite this, the Finnish blue-cross flag flew even in distant waters.
